Zine?

Zines are self-published, DIY printworks focused on community not profit.

They are traditionally made by creating a master copy and photocopying and binding or folding it, but they can also be made digitally.

Zines have strong roots in the 1930s science fiction fandom where the name fanzine was coined.

However, with such a loose definition, zines have been crafted long before the name. You could consider pamphlets and manifestos as a form of zine.

They have been crucial to many social movements and cultures

– to black culture in the Harlem Renaissance

; to queer culture in getting information past censorship

; to disabled culture in centering disabled narratives

; and feminist zines for discussing theory.

Zines have been popular in many other subcultures, like punk, riot grrrl, and beyond as ways to share art, music and poetry. Perzines are a genre of zine focused on personal experience.

Zines can be one off or have many issues.

You can make zines about big things or small things, detailed or simple. Just craft, share and enjoy!

DF Zine?

The DF zine is what we want it to be. My current ambition is to help compile a zine to remember each event and facilitate DF participation in any way they want. You should contribute to share your memories of events, express yourself and have fun.

For the next year of the zine we have a different concept. Lida has a vision of an early 2000s style magazine, and we want to connecting DFs between events, so we all stay in touch more. I also want to see if we can get more DF districts involved, rather than just DFs who come to events, and I'm excited for more written articles.
